Direction (Q. 22 to Q. 25): Read the passage and answer the question:

Ranjit Lal is an author, environmentalist and bird watcher. Here are some interesting bits from an article written by him.

In a world full of computer screens and smartphones and iPads, how on Earth do we expect the modern child to develop an interest in nature? Studies have shown that children who spend their time outdoors, rambling, playing or goofing about on treetops, pilfering mangoes and guavas, are more likely to develop an interest in the natural world — and later, go on to take on careers which involve it. My generation was lucky — we had no electronic gadgets or social media to distract us and our parents did not throw hissy fits when we returned home after a whole day out, usually bitten, scratched, pricked, our clothes in tatters; knees and elbows scraped and scabby. They just calmly told us to go take a bath.

Modern parents, alas, are neurotic about “germs” and forbid their kids from venturing out without being lathered in sunscreen. Playing in the mud (in which, incidentally every plant grows naturally) or in muddy puddles is a complete no-no.

(The Times of India)
